

The international conference „GraffitiCity“ aims at revisiting the scientific debate on the impact of materialized visual practices, art and graffiti in public urban spaces on the socio-political dynamics and power relations in different cultural and political contexts.

Historical as well as regional comparisons reveal how in how dominant claims of power are challenged, destabilized or even reinforced. Urban art and graffiti experience a renaissance which hints at both, the importance of cultural practices for social protest as well as at its commercial potential.

Thus, graffiti is increasingly used as an instrument to collectively re-appropriate the urban space and thus articulate different forms of belonging, ethnicity and citizenship from below.

In the urban centers of Latin America as well as worldwide - as seen in many of the recent protest movements, this creative practice is used to transform urban space into a medium of communication, and into a laboratory for resistance. At the same time, the urban space is adapted to market interests and becomes one component of the cultural industry, e.g. in the course of gentrification.
